From Where You Dream

In From Where You Dream, Butler reimagines the process of writing as emotional rather than intellectual, and tells writers how to achieve the dreamspace necessary for composing honest, inspired fiction. Proposing that fiction is the exploration of the human condition with yearning as its compass, Butler reinterprets the traditional tools of the craft using the dynamics of desire.

From Where You Dream: The Process of writing fiction is a transcription and condensation of Robert Olen Butler's Masters class on writing. Put together and edited by Janet Burroway, it emphasizes dreamspace or unconscious writing as opposed to thinking or analytical writing in order to create a good or true work of art. It purports that yearning, or motivation, is the key point of craft missed by inexperienced writers.

From Where You Dream: The Process of Writing Fiction, by Robert Olen Butler. There is no scarcity of advice for the student of creative writing. Guidance abounds, running the gamut from technical analyses to methods for kickstarting the creative impulse. Where the latter is concerned, the writer is advised to try writing to music, or daily journaling or cataloging her dreams (something this writer's dreams are far too dull to consider), all established ways of tapping into the experience ...

Art comes from the place where you dream, through unconscious. I teach writing, not literature. In the past, in my previous school, McNeese State University, I did that the way the writer teaches literature: through the moment, through the senses, and not trying to fit the work of art into a theory or philosophy.
