"Echo Burning" was second to last until I re-read it and it was better the second time around. Now "Personal" occupies the second-to-awful spot.

But is he as bold as in previous installments? In the tenth installment in the Jack Reacher series, the tone and cadence of Lee Child's (The Enemy, Tripwire, Without Fail) superb writing is there in spades but the kick-ass-and-take-names action that Reacher is synonymous with isn't as prevalent. The story opens with Reacher sitting at a sidewalk café in New York City.
