Privatization Experiences in the European Union

Privatization means selling a public company to private shareholders. Sometimes this follows logically from liberalization (such as with Air France), but the decision is completely independent of the European treaties and one made by the member-state government (and generally motivated by budgetary considerations).

Does Europe impose the privatization of all public services?

Abstract. We present estimates of the private and fiscal returns to schooling in 14 European Union countries. Estimates of the private returns to post-compulsory formal education take into account the effects of schooling on wages and employment probabilities and allow for academic failure rates, the direct and opportunity costs of education, and the impact of personal taxes, social security ...

Private and Fiscal Returns to Schooling in the European Union

In many European countries, privatisation has been directly linked to diffused shareholding and 'popular capitalism', whereby shares in what were public industries and services are sold on the financial market and bought up partly by private citizens but mostly by international investors such as insurance companies. France is a good example.
