Systematic geography certainly makes use of the facts that belong to regional geography, and produces its own descriptions. Regional geography does often seek explanation of local idiosyncrasies (and while regional observations may be taken as examples of broader phenomena, this has thus become systematic geography).

Uri Dam is a 480 MW hydroelectric power station on the Jhelum River near Uri in Baramulla district of the Jammu and Kashmir, India. It is located very near to the Line of Control, the de facto border between India and Pakistan. The station is largely built under a hill with a 10 km tunnel. It is of the run-of-the-river type without a large dam, since the Indus Waters Treaty gives Pakistan the exclusive right to regulate the Jhelum River. On 4
